

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A cobalt layer is formed over an entire surface including over a device isolation region. Silicon ions are selectively implanted into only the cobalt layer on the device isolation region and thereafter a silicidation reaction is done, whereby local interconnects are formed between source and drain regions of adjacent MOS transistors.